

My aim as your wedding photographer

Your wedding day is as important to me as it is to you. My aim as your photographer is to record not only how good you both looked on the day but something of the atmosphere as well. Whether it be a baby crying or the page boy getting dirty playing football my pictures will include both candid and formal images. I do not limit the amount of pictures I take as the important thing for me is that the event is recorded as accurately and professionally as possible.

As well as providing me with a list beforehand please feel free to approach me on the day to ask for anything you may have seen or thought of that you might like photographed and I will do my best to capture it.

I work as fast as is possible, always being aware of guests' reluctance to be kept waiting around yet still maintaining a keen eye for detail ensuring that if a shirt is untucked or the bride's tiara is not on quite straight I can correct it before pressing the shutter.

All your photographs go through a vigorous post-production enhancement to ensure they look as good as possible and many special effects can be added if so desired (at further cost).

My role is to add to the enjoyment of your wedding day and to ensure that you have something special to remember it by.
